

BLACK HAND AGENT THROWS BRAND INTO PICTURE THEATRE

Woman and Babe Taken From Third Floor Fire Escape in Burning Building.

Camrose went to sleep early today while waiting for agents of the Black Hand, and as a result lost his moving picture establishment at No. 13 Grand street and would have lost his wife, Filomena, twenty-five years old, and their four-month-old baby but for the heroism of New York firemen.

Camrose opened the Teatro Camrose in the Grand street house more than a year ago. His little place held 300 persons and he did such a good business that a rear one-story extension was built for a vaudeville stage and more seats. Then Black Hand letters began coming, demanding $1,000. He was told he must give this amount to the "sick synd" of the Mano Nero or lose his establishment, probably his life as well. MANDED DAYS RECEIPTS TO WIFE.

Last night while in the lobby of the theatre he heard murmurs that led him to think somebody might pay him a visit before dawn. He did not want to alarm his wife, so after he had closed up he went upstairs to the third and top floor, where they lived with their baby, and gave her the day's receipts, $18.

"I'm suffering from the heat," he told her, "and will take a ride to Rockaway so cool off. I'll be back in the morning."

Then he went downstairs to the theatre and on a seat in the rear, near the Grand street side, began his vigil. He fell asleep some time before 4 o'clock, for at that time Policeman McLaury was passing along the Mulberry street side when he saw flames coming from the picture concern. Someone had cut a wire screen and tossed a firebrand onto the little stage.

McLaury sent in an alarm and broke in the Grand street door of the theatre. In the rear, still asleep, was Camrose. The flames had spread so rapidly they had cut off the stairs, and the policeman and frantic husband and father were unable to get up to rescue Mrs. Camrose and the baby, the only persons in the building.

One first thing the men of Engine Company No. 5, from Broome street, just in the rear of the theatre, saw when they stopped in Grand street was the woman with the baby in her arms, scrambling from the third floor fire escape. They soon saw why she made no effort to get down. The drop ladder was fastened securely to the balcony railing and there was no way for her to get from the third landing of the escape to the second.

There was no long ladder with the engine company, their most extensive being only about ten feet. This was raised to the lower part of the escape. Firemen George J. Short and John O'Toole and John McGrath, the latter chauffeur for Deputy Chief Langford, hurried up with two scaling ladders. MOTHER FRANTIC AS SHORT TAKES BABE.

By the time the flames were billowing out the second story window, Short took the baby from its mother's arms and handed it to McGrath, who carried it to the street. The mother became frantic when she saw the baby being carried away and started to jump. It was all Short could do to hold her until O'Toole came up. He finally handed her over the parapet into O'Toole's arms and O'Toole carried her down the scaling ladders to the street.

The woman began to bawl the loss of her $125 tent, saying she had left it under the mattress. Firemen took another chance and succeeded in finding it for her before the fire got too hot.

The flames spread back to Mulberry street, and a second alarm brought Chief Kenyon from the station house uptown. Owing to the thickly populated district he ordered 300 families in tenements in Mulberry and Mott streets out of their homes, and reserves from the Mulberry and Elizabeth street stations drove them forth.

The firemen confined the fire to the one building, where it did $300 damage. On the second floor the Italian Federation of Actors had its rooms, but no one was there. Camrose told the police that a few days ago Aristide Sigmund, one of his vaudeville actors, received a Black Hand letter ordering him to stop working for Camrose. He ignored it and a night or two ago his locker in the rear of the theatre was robbed of all his stage paraphernalia, and he was attacked in the street by thugs and beaten so he had to be taken to a hospital. Camrose, the police learned after the fire, is a son of Thomas Camrose, and the two have a partnership moving picture theatre at No. 178-179 avenue. Black Hand letters were sent to them there last fall, and on Nov. 28 last demands for $1,000 having been ignored, a bomb was set off at 7:30 P. M., when the theatre was filled with people, and seven persons were hurt. The explosive had been planted against an exit near the Eleventh street side. One arrest was made, but the prisoner was discharged.

Pension for Lady Purdon Clarke. LONDON, July 1.—Among the Civil List pensions granted to-day by the British Government is one of $300 a year to Lady Purdon Clarke, widow of the late Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, formerly director of the Metropolitan Museum, New York. Pensions of $275 and $250, respectively, per year were granted to the daughters of the late Justin McCarthy and Leigh Hunt.

Earthquake at Messina. MESSINA, Sicily, July 1.—A slight earthquake shock lasting only a few seconds caused considerable alarm here to-day, and this was increased by distinct underground rumblings. Many of the inhabitants left their residences and took refuge in the open fields.
